Hiring Team
Adyen
Amsterdam, The Netherlands

Dear Hiring Team,
The product problems that interest me most are the ones customers should never have to think about. A payment goes through, the numbers make sense, reconciliation holds up, and the experience feels simple even when the systems, logic, and coordination behind it are deeply complex. That is what makes this role at Adyen so interesting to me. It sits at the intersection of payments complexity, product thinking, and commercial transparency, which is exactly the kind of space I have enjoyed working in.

At both American Express and Axis Bank, I worked in parts of payments where accuracy, logic, and coordination really mattered. I enjoyed that. I liked being close to the moving parts: how payment data flowed, where reconciliation could break, how operational pain showed up downstream, and what needed to change to make the system clearer and more reliable. That is why this role feels like a natural fit for me.

I would bring comfort with payment complexity and a way of working that turns it into clearer product decisions, stronger reconciliation, and more useful tooling. My background is broader than interchange and scheme fees alone, but the core challenge in this role feels very familiar to me.
I am looking for a long-term opportunity in the Netherlands where I can contribute and grow. I hold a valid Dutch work permit, I am learning Dutch at A2 level, and I can relocate if needed. Adyen's emphasis on diverse perspectives also stands out to me, because the best teams are the ones that think differently but stay aligned on quality and ownership.

Best,
